The following is from the "John Donkey." It is an excellent hit at the fashionable "philanthropy" of the day:

Or Postage must be paid.

THE ROSINE ASSOCIATION.—The great and good John Donkey still continues to be irrecoverably stupid in regard to the good to be effected by the Rosine Association. The object of this extraordinery body is to reform the outcast Pariahs of womanhood, and to restore to virtue those whom society has forced beyond its pale. And how is this very desirable end to be effected?

Simply so. John Smith keeps a large establishment for the sale of shirts. John pays sixpence a

They can thus by extraordinary labor make seven shillings a week-and be virtuous in the bargain. They see themselves trambled upon, sneered at and despised. They see the harlot live in the apparent magnificence up on the wages of her infamy. They live of bread and water, and are clad in coarse gas ments; she fares sumptuously, and arrays he dainty form in satin. If they repine at the lot, and change it for what their ill-judgmen deems a better, they do very wrong. Jon SMITH thinks so. He therefore gives te dollars towards reforming those wretche whom his sixpenny shirt starvation ha driven to degradation.

But we are so stupid as to think that Rosine Associations and Magdalen Societie go to work at the wrong time. We a stupid enough to believe in the old prover about an ounce of prevention and all tha We are stupid, we know it; and like most our contemporaries glory in our stupidity.

We have an idea in regard to the matte It is our own idea, and of course very stupic We propose that John Smith should pay fair price to his shirt-makers. If his bra cannot contain the magnificent conception such a profuse out-lay of money, then the Rosine Association should give out shirts no to those who are degraded, but to those wh will be forced into degradation unless son speedy interposition be made. None your locking the stable-door after t steed is stolen, if you please. But the we are so stupid, that nobody will pay the least attention to anything we say. It is great pity for mankind in general, and our selves in particular, that we are not sma and philanthropic and so on-like the Rosin Association.
